Plugged Lobsters.

Speaking of lobsters reminds a writer in the Bath Enterprise that he had a talk with an old fisherman the other day who rapped those men who sell short lobsters severely. Said he, "They will break the law and sell short lobsters for three cents apiece, when if they would only take them to some shallow cove and throw them overboard they would remain in that vicinity and in a few weeks would reach the legal length and bring fifteen or twenty cents each instead of three or four." That the lobsters will stay in a cove he claims is proven by the fact that Elbridge Wallace at one time had a car with about one hundred in it, the claws of all being plugged. A storm came up and wrecked the car, spilling all the lobsters into the sea, but for weeks afterward he continued catching lobsters, the claws of which bore his plugs.

Good Stock and Share.

Sch. Edward S. Eveleth, Capt. John Marshall, weighed off 158,465 pounds of fletched halibut, 3000 pounds of codfish, and 60 barrels of halibut fins as the result of her recent trip, stocking $8738 32, the crew sharing $251.47. The Eveleth was the last but one of the fleet to get away last spring, and has made a fine share off her stock.

Big Shack Trip.

Sch. Joseph Rowe, Capt. Clayton Morrissey, of this port, is at Boston to-day with 150,000 pounds of fresh cod. The T wharf buyers evidently wanted fish, for they started them at $4 and $3 1-2 per hundred weight. If the price holds up anywhere near this, Capt. Morrissey will make an extra fine stock.
